FOODBORNE DISEASES

Every year an estimated 76 million cases of foodborne illness and 5,000 associated deaths occur in the United States. Given the risk associated with recurrent outbreaks from commercial food sources, it is important to recognize various syndromes of foodborne illness, including those which may require specific evaluation and management strategies. If you would like copies of any of these articles, or if you would like further information on this topic, please contact any Library staff member.
